Capital Changes Withholding Suite

Accurate and timely withholding is a critical component of broker operations. Because withholding agents are personally liable for any tax required to be withheld, noncompliance creates costly risks and financial liabilities for firms that must withhold U.S. tax on payments to nonresident aliens, and firms that deliver Forms 1099 to U.S. taxpayers.

Wolters Kluwer Corporate Action Solutions start with the deep tax expertise of Capital Changes — the industry's standard for corporate actions tax analysis and details. The Capital Changes Withholding Suite is a solution withholding agents can use to correctly identify and calculate withholding liabilities caused by corporate actions and cashless income events.

Problems solved:

- Lack of staff members to devote to monitoring corporate actions and their tax implications
- Risk due to failure to book a transaction or inaccurately booking a transaction
- Costly mistakes due to lack of understanding of the tax consequences of corporate actions
- Time-consuming processes
- Need for operational efficiency in tracking corporate action tax consequences
- Difficulty incorporating basis related adjustments into operations portfolio accounting systems

Security type	Regulatory effect	Solution
Publicly Traded Partnerships (PTPs)	Newly issued regulations under Section 1446(f) require brokers to withhold on PTP transfers and distributions that occur on or after January 1, 2023, unless an exception applies. Eligibility for withholding exceptions is in part based on analyzing "qualified notices" provided by PTPs.	Capital Changes 1446F PTP Alert: Provides advanced notification of PTP distributions and important data points from the related qualified notices, allowing brokers to shift the burden of finding and analyzing qualified notices.
Convertible bond or stock, stock right (or warrant)	Under Sec. 305(c), holders of applicable security types can have taxable dividend income as a result of an increase in such holder's entitlement to shares of stock—a deemed dividend that is subject to withholding, even though such holder does not receive any payment of cash or property at such time.	Capital Changes 305C Alert: Independently calculated deemed dates and dividend amounts, supplemented with issuer confirmations and Forms 8937.
U.S. publicly traded stock	Section 302 applies when a corporation acquires some or all of its stock from shareholders in exchange for property (a redemption). Section 302 can also apply to corporate action events beyond redemptions such as mergers, reverse splits, or spin-offs. Sec. 302 can result in dividends subject to withholding tax and information reporting.	Capital Changes 302 Alert: Independently calculated deemed dates and dividend amounts, supplemented with issuer confirmations and Forms 8937.
Exchange-listed options or futures	Under Sec. 871(m), brokers and dealers holding derivative financial instruments linked to U.S. stocks (equity-linked instruments), such as options and futures, must calculate "dividend equivalent" payments and treat them as dividends from sources within the U.S., subject to withholding.	Capital Changes 871M Automated Compliance Tool: Provides dates and dividend equivalent amounts, including those resulting from combined transactions.
Debt instruments	Under FATCA, withholding agents are not required to withhold on payments on grandfathered obligations (generally a U.S. debt instrument issued before July 1, 2014). A grandfathered obligation can lose its exempt status due to a material modification of the debt and payments on it can become subject to FATCA withholding.	FATCA Debt Modifications: Provides grandfathered status change updates, the reason why the debt instrument's grandfathered status has changed, and the date as of which FATCA withholding will be required going forward.
