Does your company need to file an updated beneficial ownership information report? Answer these questions to find out!

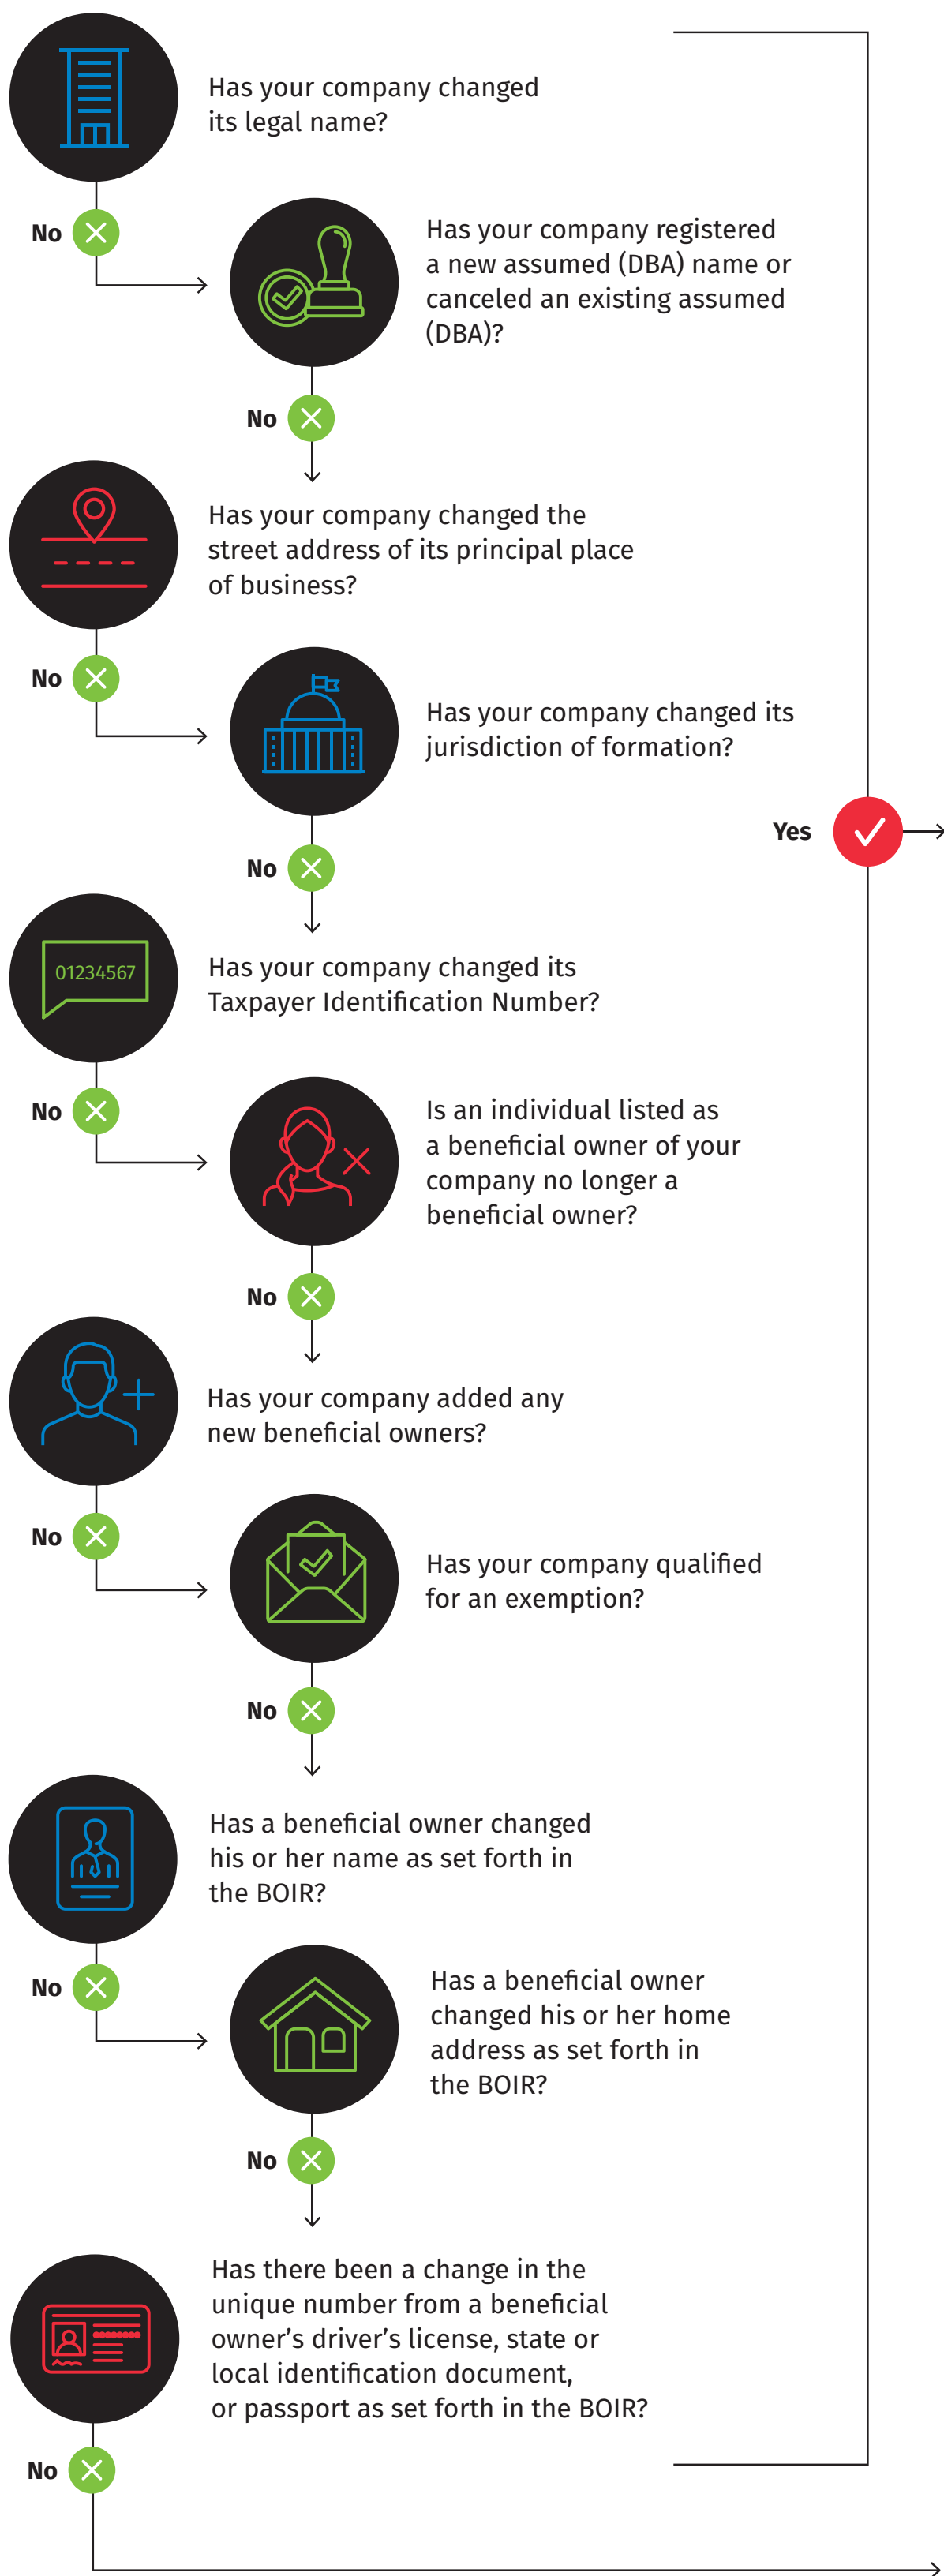

The Corporate Transparency Act requires reporting companies to file an updated Beneficial Ownership Information Report (BOIR) within 30 calendar days of a change in the information reported. Non-compliance with the updating requirement can result in civil and criminal penalties.

Not sure what changes trigger the updating requirement? Follow the series of questions.

Your company's last beneficial ownership information report (BOIR) was filed on what date? _____

Since that date:

If you answered YES to any of the questions, your reporting company may be required to file an updated beneficial ownership information report with FinCEN. An update is required to be filed within 30 calendar days of the change. If the reporting company now qualifies for an exemption, the BOIR only needs to indicate that.

If you answered NO to all of the questions, your reporting company may not be required to file an updated beneficial ownership information report at this time.

CT Corporation's Beneficial Ownership Information Platform can streamline your compliance process and ensure accuracy, whether you're filing one BOIR or many. Contact us to learn more.
