Wolters Kluwer to acquire AI-powered clinical decision support platform AgileMD

AgileMD will further advance UpToDate Expert AI integration into healthcare workflows

Alphen aan den Rijn, NL – November 13, 2026 – Wolters Kluwer Health has signed an agreement to acquire AgileMD, a healthcare technology company, for up to $100 million, of which $40 million is an upfront payment and the balance is a deferred consideration contingent upon reaching certain performance targets.

AgileMD provides AI-powered clinical decision support for health care professionals, offering them interactive clinical pathways and predictive analytics to enhance consistency in care and help them to reduce mortality rates. The company's Pathways product operationalizes local guidelines in the EHR workflow for consistency in care and outcomes measurement. Its eCART solution is a real-time AI-powered clinical surveillance engine that is FDA[1]-cleared and designed to help reduce mortality rates.

"Combined with UpToDate Expert AI and our partnerships, AgileMD will serve as a vital enabler for true UpToDate ubiquity in healthcare – facilitating UpToDate's expansion into embedded workflows, local guidelines, and new digital health applications," said Yaw Fellin, Senior Vice President, Wolters Kluwer Clinical Solutions. "With AgileMD, we are well positioned to help healthcare systems provide better patient care and extract more value from their tech investments."

Borna Safabakhsh, Co-Founder and CEO at AgileMD, commented, "We are excited to join Wolters Kluwer Health. Coupled with UpToDate, AgileMD can more fully deliver its transformative impact in critical decision support workflows. Leveraging UpToDate's foundational capabilities, AgileMD will accelerate and streamline the development and maintenance of more advanced clinical pathways for complex clinical decision-making support."

Since its introduction in September 2025, UpToDate Expert AI has been adopted by more than 2,700 U.S. hospitals and health systems, representing more than 95% of U.S.-based UpToDate Enterprise Edition customers.
