Vehicle refinancing is a growth opportunity for lenders post-COVID

Originations are “in the money”, but can you handle the extra volume of refis?

When it comes to vehicle refinance, you’re looking to:

- Manage your exposure to compliance and regulatory risk
- Deliver a superior customer experience, defined by fast and pain-free processing
- Streamline workflows and automate manual tasks
- Find alternative growth avenues in response to changing market conditions

Two-thirds of auto originations are “in the money” in 2022

220,000 borrowers are in the market for refinancing

$07 delinquency rates are expected to bounce back to pre-pandemic levels

There are a host of competitive pressures at play, too.

- Jeopardize customer experience if you can’t process titles quickly and accurately
- Circumvent due diligence and fail to protect your vehicle assets
- Invest in costly headcount increases that don’t actually minimize your risk, meet your needs as you grow, or allow you to use your resources most effectively

The limits of processing titles in-house

As volumes of auto loan refinancing titles increase and you consider expanding into more jurisdictions, you might focus on getting up to speed on various state-specific requirements. But take a wait-and-see, reactive approach, and you may fall short when you’re facing challenges you need to get out in front of—and that could mean you...

- With more than $10%-15% of motor vehicle liens can go unperfected!

There will be an increasing volume of titles—more urgency to process them efficiently and accurately

The emergence of non-bank competition such as credit unions and FinTechs, as well as startups that facilitate motor vehicle refinancing online

More pressure to deliver a superior digital experience— which increases the need to optimize workflows
